That means students are not just keeping pace with grade-level expectations – they are gaining back time. Time that would otherwise be lost to unfinished learning, skill gaps, or inconsistent instructional support.

For many students, those extra weeks are the difference between:

For many students, those extra weeks are the difference between:

- Remaining below benchmark and reaching grade-level proficiency.
- Struggling readers falling further behind and accelerating forward.
- Teachers reacting to data and instruction happening automatically, in real time.

These gains are especially strong among early readers, multilingual learners, and students below benchmark – demonstrating Amira’s ability to function as a learning agent that personalizes instruction at scale and delivers growth where it matters most.
